HOUSE OF PIES

1869 N. Vermont Ave., Los Angeles
CA 90027 (map) | 323-666-996;

house-of-pies.net

Cooking Method: Grilled

Short Order: This classic diner makes an exceptional classic diner burger with a Southern California touch.

Want Fries with That? Yes; not too crispy, but still super tasty. The rings are heavy on the breading, but also very tasty

Prices: House Cheeseburger
w/fries, $9.30

Sometimes something wonderful is right under your nose. I had thought I knew my neighborhood burger scene pretty much backwards and forwards. My little hipster-made-good neighborhood of Los Feliz is home to a very solid burger at The Fix, a less-than-stellar nouveau-diner burger at Fred 62, and the Eastside outpost of the growing Umami empire. Otherwise there isn't much in the way of burger options. At least that's what I thought until a recent lunch excursion to a neighborhood stalwart that I'd somehow overlooked.

House of Pies sits on the northern end of our "main drag" of Vermont Avenue and has long been a hangout of the neighborhood cool kids. Opened over forty years ago, the classic (late) mid-century diner has the old-school sheen that attracts the old and young alike. When I first arrived in Los Angeles I often found myself there even though their menu was just standard diner fare—it was cheap and the place looked cool. The food wasn't anything to write home (or to Serious Eats) about. But that was then, and nowadays House of Pies makes a truly great burger.

The current owner has been at the helm for about seven years, but has embraced the character of the diner with both arms. The ununiformed staff is chatty and friendly, the menu is standard diner fare with a bit of updating, and much of the menu is homemade (including the pies). The burgers get their own section on the menu and a very apropos
